PRECISION DRIVER, KURT

Extreme stunts straight from the driver's side

They create Disney-MGM Studios excitement every day with tire-squealing cars, flying motorcycles and the ultimate peek behind the scenes at the new Lights, Motors, Action!™ Extreme Stunt Show. This precision driving team of seven men and one woman (a 19-year-old motocross champion) has international experience, from movies to TV shows and even the Indiana Jones™ Epic Stunt Spectacular! 11-year stunt veteran and former gymnast, Kurt "Hock" Hockenberry, did a quick Q & A with Mickey Monitor.

MM: What are some of the highlights of driving the hero car?

KH: The hero comes in bearing down at 60 mph and whips the car around in a 540-degree turn. It's one of the fastest parts of the show. Then in the finale, I go over two ramps, crash out of a building through some doors, over a moat with explosions going everywhere!

MM: How did you learn to drive the villain cars on two wheels?

KH: We use an "outrigger," a fifth wheel on the left side. The trick is to find the balance point by tugging at the steering wheel and "scissoring" it back and forth. When you first take the "outrigger" wheel off, it's pretty nerve-wracking! But I look forward to it now, finding the balance point and fighting to keep the car up.

MM: What's one of your favorite stunts?

KH: Driving the "reverse hero car." I drive on stage in an identical version of the hero car with a body that's switched around to make it look like I'm driving backwards. Visibility is very low, but when you've driven it for as long as we've been trained, you get used to it.

MM: And afterward, you reveal how it's done?

KH: Yes, that's a great thing about our show. We respect the fact that today's audiences are very intelligent, so we don't pull the wool over their eyes. They really like that.

The cars in the show are specially equipped with rally racing cages inside to protect the drivers. Each runs on a 1300 cc motorcycle engine in the back and has a direct drive transmission. They weigh less than regular cars but are 2 1/2 times more powerful.

New Cinderellabration show is dressed for SUCCESS

Fashion and fairy tales mix in Magic Kingdom® stage spectacular

We love the magic of seeing Cinderella crowned a princess. We love the majestic musical score and gorgeous choreography. But for a lot of us former princess wanna-be's, the big-time appeal of Cinderellabration comes from its glamorous array of royal outfits. So, we just had to talk with Lynne Ford, Senior Costume Designer at Walt Disney Attractions Japan. She's the Disney designer who put the "bling" into the original Tokyo Disneyland® stage show.

According to Lynne, "The Tokyo version of the show took place at night in winter, so we used a great deal of fur trim for a luxurious look as well as warmth!" And even though the show is now performed in the Florida sunshine, its winter roots remain in the fur-lined capes of Cinderella and her Prince.

The show is cast with a who's who of Disney Princesses who arrive at the big event dressed to dazzle. Snow White's skirt features dozens and dozens of embroidered sequins. Snow White, Belle, Jasmine and Sleeping Beauty are each dressed in a kaleidoscope of lavish textures, colors and styles.

All in all, it took over 5,500 yards of fabric to make the show costumes. And no expense was spared. In fact, some of the fabric was woven in the same French mills that supply Paris's most renowned couturiers.

LYNNE'S SKETCHPAD

Lynne's original costume sketches reveal much about her use of fabrics to tell a story.

"It was the FIRST time we created a theatrical version of the King. I felt it was VERY important to portray the character's correct body shape."

"Cinderella's coronation gown sparkles with 100 HAND-SEWN stones. Her skirt and collar are made of corded and beaded satin, and the bodice is decorated with silver metallic lace."

"MANY fabrics were custom-appliquéd with sequins. Here, I used a lacy and sparkly fabric OVER a solid base to give a richer look to skirts."

Expedition Everest inspires mission to Himalayas

Disney joins team of scientists to explore the legendary "realm of the Yeti"

Disney Imagineers are taking their quest for authentic storytelling to amazing new heights—in fact, some of the highest heights in the world. Teaming up with Conservation International and Discovery Networks, Disney is mounting an extraordinary expedition to the mountains of the Himalayas to search for new species and ancient legends.

The expedition includes more than 20 renowned scientists who are spending two months in the Himalayas this fall, searching for undiscovered species likely to live in these little-known but important conservation sites. Imagineers will research cultural and spiritual legends that will be used to make the Disney's Animal Kingdom® attraction, Expedition Everest™, as authentic as possible.

The thrill ride, scheduled to debut next spring, will include the folklore surrounding the Yeti, also known as the abominable snowman.

"At one level, it's a high-speed train adventure set in an incredible story," said Joe Rohde, Imagineering's lead designer of Disney's Animal Kingdom Park, who will accompany the scientists during the research trip. "It also remains true to the underlying philosophy of the Park about conservation and the sanctity of the land."

Rohde said plans also call for talks with Himalayan residents about their relationship with the Yeti. "To them, the Yeti is a protector of the land," Rohde told us.

The current itinerary for the expedition goes from August to October and includes three Himalayan countries, where the team will conduct a full biological survey. In fact, they believe the mission will likely result in the discovery of a new species.

Look for an update on the progress of the expedition and Expedition Everest—Legend of the Forbidden Mountain™ in future issues of the Mickey Monitor.

Disney Imagineer Joe Rohde (left) will return to the Himalayas to uncover more facts, legends and inspiration for the new attraction.

The fascinating relationship between Himalayan culture and the Yeti is woven into the meticulous details you'll see at the new attraction.

Cinderella loses shoes at sea!

Wait a minute ... broken glass slippers? Time-traveling step-sisters? Cinderella's dream over before it even starts? These are a few of the surprising new takes on the classic Disney story in the new show, "Twice Charmed—An Original Twist on the Cinderella Story," now performed on the Disney Magic®, one of the Disney Cruise Line® luxury cruise ships.

In this new musical, the evil stepsisters figure the Prince would have chosen one of them if it weren't for Cinderella's glass slippers. So they and their evil Stepmother call upon their evil Fairy Godfather, who sends them back in time to destroy the glass slippers and change the course of the fairy tale. Thus unfolds a new tale about inner beauty and the importance of following dreams.

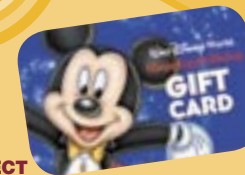

In addition to favorite tunes from the film, a magnificent new musical score featuring six original songs was created for this stage spectacular.

"Twice Charmed" is exclusively on Disney Cruise Line 7-night cruises, so you may want to book one soon.

"Twice Charmed" introduces a new Disney villain—Franco Di Fortunato, the fairy Godfather to Cinderella's stepmother.
